These inaugural ceremonies in and around the harbor of the New World's metropolis were ushered in to-day at the Highlands of Navesink by the raising of the American flag on the brand new 136-foot National liberty pole on the lofty bluff between the castle-environed Navesink Lights, erected expressly for the occasion.

Mr. Wilder's oration was interrupted by a heavy shower of twenty minutes, which caused the crowd to seek whatever shelter

The shower over Mme. Alberti, surrounded by members of the Daughters of the Revolution and Colonial Dames, read the following poem, composed especially for the occasion by liezekiah Butterworth:

THE CAPT. JOHN PAUL JONES FLAG.

It was in accordance with the eternal fitness of things, therefore, that to-day's ceremony should begin with the hoisting to the top of the pole of the original American flag that was so gallantly defended by the invincible Capt. John Paul Jones, of the Bon Homme Richard, in his world-famed engagement with the British man-of-war Serapis.

Fitting, too, was it that Mrs. H. R. P. Stafford, of Cottage City, Mass., whose father, Lieut, James B. Stafford, plunged overboard and rescued the banner when it was shot away by the Serapis, and then nailed it fast to the masthead, should to-day fling the ancient, builettorn and revered emblem to the breeze hearly 114 years after the gallant rescue by her heroic ancestor.

Paul Jones's Flag.

The flag is still intact, save for the holes made by British bullets, and one of the stripes, which had to be replaced it is six feet square and has but twelve stars, Georgia not having been admitted to the Union when the flag was made. The flag was bequeathed to Mrs. Stafford by her father, to whom it was presented by Capt. Jones.

It is believed that upon her death she will leave it to the United States Govern.

bonds authorized by the refunding act of 1830 on a 3 per cent, basis.

The Government was to have the option of paying off the loan at the end of a year, to allow Congress, in the mean time, to authorize a specific basis of bonds to maintain the parity of gold and silver. This plan, it is said, the bankers all voted to be impracticable.

In the mean time, Secretary Carlisle is reported to be keeping up the gold reserves by contributions from National banks throughout the country, and it is evident from the improvement in the tone of the stock market that the apprehensions and fears which upset prices a week ago have been in a great measure allayed.
